The Director's 15 Frequently Asked Questions

What was your inspiration for the story?

Living in the small town of Ashland and noticing how everyone is overly friendly and trusting more so than where I grew up in Michigan.

How did the movie come about?

Sat down wrote it with a few people in mind...and viola.

Who wrote the screenplay ?

The handsome man you see before you today.

What are the film's core themes?

Friendship, betrayal, and wanting what other people have. Whether that is money, drugs, or women.

What's the most important message that your film conveys?

That a lot of people are never satisfied with what they have. People tend to use other people, and possessions to try to fill the hole in their life.

How big was your production budget?

Crazy small.

How were you able to fund the project?

Good community of people in Southern Oregon willing to volunteer their time for a script and production team they believe in.

Tell us a bit about the shoot.

Fast and furious 8 day shoot in 10 days.

Are there any other projects you are working on Right Now?

Working with local musicians on music videos and a new drama. We've done horror/suspense, crime/action, and now we want to make people cry.

What or who inspired you to become an independent filmmaker?

The list is endless. I literally try to watch almost everything since I was a real young. Saw Fantasia in the theatre when I was younger than 5. I was the only kid in the theater that never moved or talked during the movie.

Will the film be presented at film festivals?

That's the plan.
